

Statistics Prove Cruising is Safe...

Despite a rash of recent negative news coverage, cruise travel remains one of the safest vacation options available, according to data provided by the International Council of Cruise Lines and independently reviewed by nationally known criminologist Professor James Fox for Congress. From 2003-2005, more than 31 million people worldwide went on cruises, with a total of 206 complaints from passengers and crew. Fox said no place - on land or sea - is totally safe and the number of reported incidents of serious crime on cruise ships is extremely low, no matter what standard is used - validating the industry's commitment to the safety and security of its guests.
